

From Globalization to Localization

We use what we've learned from international issues and give it back to our community. In the activity "Love for Books, Books for Love", we collected 502 second-hand books from the local community and donated them to Myanmar.

Our teaching goal for international education is to cultivate healthy, happy, and excellent global citizens.

In order to enhance the students' international communication competence, they use Internet and various mobile technology to interact and communicate with students from all over the world. They learn intercultural communication competence and skills.

At the same time, through learning about international issues, the students are aware of the duty to protect the environment for sustainable development.

At our school, the students learn to see things from a global perspective. And they further transfer learning into practice as performing the duty as global citizens.

Technology

We use mobile devices, such as iPads/tablets, and multiple apps to learn about international issues. And we further transfer learning into practice to perform the duty as global citizens.

A Window to Another Culture

We enrich the curriculum and improve our teaching by introducing and embedding international activities across the whole school. By learning about different countries, the pupils can further respect the diversity of cultures.

International Friends

We make penpals and also keypals. By writing letters and video chatting, we learn how to see things from a different perspective and widen our horizons.

Do you know what is the most popular in Taipei? In order to make our international friends know more about us, we selected the best three attractions and facilities in Taipei, including Taipei 101, 7-11, and U-bike. Our pupils made various videos that introduce Taipei and uploaded them on Youtube.

From “Learn to Read” to “Read to Learn”

As a global citizen, language skill is very important. And nowadays, English has also ready become an international lingua franca. Thanks to British Council, we have various English picture books to read. Through reading, we can not only acquire the target language but also learn knowledge. We believe that reading is a lifelong journey that lead us to a wonderful world.
